Why is business trip insurance important?

Duty of care of the employer

Within the scope of his duty of care, the employer must take adequate measures to protect the health of his employees. As well as causing damage to the company image, failure to take precautions with respect to insurance cover and assistance on business trips can lead to liability claims and high financial costs.

Cover for employees and human capital

A major risk to the company (for SMEs, in particular) lies in the concentration of knowledge and business contacts with a few key personnel. These key staff members go away on business trips more than the average employee, when there is a risk of an accident or sickness every day. In an emergency, they are reliant on professional help.

Treatment costs outside Switzerland

In certain countries (e.g. USA, Canada, Australia, Japan), medical and hospital bills can turn out to be extremely high so that the compulsory basic insurance cover is not sufficient.

Unforeseen problems and costs

In addition to accidents and sickness, cancellations, flight delays or lost baggage can have a great impact on efficiency and the costs of business trips.

Cover for civil liability claims

Civil liability claims can cause enormous costs and ruin employees and the business financially unless they have taken out adequate cover.

Protection of legal interests

Even outside their business activities, employees need the reassuring certainty that their legal interests are being professionally represented and that the legal costs incurred will be borne by the insurer.

Damage to hired vehicles

When claims are made under comprehensive and theft insurance for hired vehicles, business travellers often receive large bills for excess sums.
